

Ananya 12 'Sci' 3383

Those words, those unspoken words, are the words that need to be said, 'cause its hard to just keep them within 'cause then they get hard to forget Those words, those unspoken words, could be the reason for forgiveness or for friendships to break so maybe those words need to be said those words, those unspoken words, could be the last words you say, before your chance gets away, to make or break things, so those unspoken words need to be said even if it feels very difficult they need to be said those unspoken words need to be said

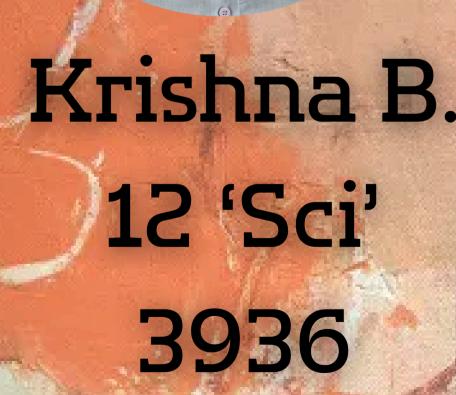

The words that are not spoken of are the ones that linger The kind of words you feel all around you, everywhere You want to blurt it out but can't quite find the strength it could be because you're afraid But let me warn you, for the unspoken words are the words that should be spoken of

because the longer you hold it in the harder it gets

Samruddhi
IB 'II year' 3822

Looking back now, I wish I would have said, those words out loud, and not in my head Forgiveness is easy it was told but the pain it brought increased ten fold Flashing memories oh god it hurts, and now I regret those unspoken words.

V. Athmika
12th 'Mgmt'
S116

Words with purpose always don't do justice For what I feel I prefer more than to tell To show it's impact I channel it through my act For actions speak more than words.

She is not a mechanical robot Nor is she a voiceless statue Her mind is full of life and activity Brimming with thoughts, questions, ideas But she can't bring herself to express them There is so much she wants to say But her words remain unspoken The few words she does say It was like a leap of faith for her There is so much she wants to say But her words remain unspoken The few words she does say It was like a leap of faith for her She longs to convey her mind's thoughts

But an invisible force holds her back

Silencing her, paralyzing her There is so much she wants to say But her words remain unspoken As she watches everyone make this mountain task of expressing themselves seem so effortless, she wonders if she is the only one or does the fog of unspoken words surround them too? Do they also get that similar feeling to her? When there is so much she wants to say But somehow her words remain unspoken Now, she realizes that The beauty and satisfaction of an Expressed thought Is worth all that effort and that leap of faith. And that she can, after all, overpower that invisible force With a newfound power - confidence. There is so much I want to say And I won't let the words remain unspoken

Not anymore.